HUNLEY WATERS, SOUTH CAROLINA'S PREMIER GREEN-BUILT, WATERFRONT COMMUNITY, HOSTS COMMUNITY LAUNCH EVENT SATURDAY, JULY 12

NORTH CHARLESTON, SC—June 24, 2008—Hunley Waters, the first sustainable, waterfront community in North Charleston, SC, officially opens its doors to the public on Saturday, July 12, as they host a neighborhood launch event. The new green-built neighborhood, located at 4167 O'Hear Avenue in Park Circle, will be open for an afternoon of live bluegrass by local band Jeffries Creek Revival, summer cuisine and kayaking off the community dock on Noisette Creek. Allison Bailes, Regional Manager from EarthCraft House in Atlanta, GA, and Bryan Cordell, Director of the South Carolina Sustainability Institute in North Charleston, will be on hand to discuss sustainable construction and give energy efficiency performance testing workshops. Additionally, guests at the Hunley Waters unveiling event can register for the chance to win a brand new kayak from Half Moon Outfitters, perfect for launching into Noisette Creek. North Charleston Mayor Keith Summey and other dignitaries from the community will be in attendance to show their support of this new sustainable community.

"The City of North Charleston is proud to welcome the Hunley Waters community," stated Mayor Summey. "I am passionate about the continuing success of North Charleston, and this sustainable development reflects my ambitions of what is yet to come. Hunley Waters is an overwhelmingly positive step in the revitalization of the area."

On-site construction of the Hunley Waters neighborhood began in December 2007, and the first phase of homes now nears completion as the first residents have begun moving in. The homes range in size from 1,700 square feet to 1,996 square feet and feature open and functional floor plans, plentiful windows, 9-to-10 foot ceilings, parking, adequate storage, expansive wraparound front porches with exposed rafters, private back decks, partial tin roofs and cutting-edge appliances.
